LACQUERWARE

— Typical handicraft made in Japan —

Lacquer ware is one of the most famous Japanese traditional crafts, and it is originated more than 5,000 years ago.

Throughout the long-standing history, the technique of Japanese lacquer has been improved and refined. Lacquer ware is usually wooden-made, Urushi is a natural paint extracted from urushi tree, and its original tone of color and brightness firmly draw a line from others. This painting and polishing processes are repeated several times to robust the products.

After the lacquer ware is carefully painted, it is sometimes decorated with gold powder, gold foil or nacre to make it shinier. Hence, Japanese lacquer ware is crafted through various manufacturing processes. These Japanese lacquer wares vary from everyday-use items such as soup bowl, rice bowl, plate and cup to luxury furniture and tea ceremony set. These products are symbols of Japanese culture and are deeply rooted in our daily life.

Our Company, ISUKE & CO., LTD., founded more than 180 years ago in Kyoto, is a leader in the application of Urushi, a traditional Japanese natural lacquer. At present, our main product line is Shikki, Japanese lacquerware, which we sell all over Japan as well as overseas markets. We also carry other Urushi products.

We hope that many people will come to know and appreciate the beauty and wonder of Urushi and our Shikki traditional Japanese goods.

MOKU

MOKU was produced as contemporary tableware with the support of designer. MOKU products are made by wood and those grains are natural and beautiful. They are light and thin by the excellent technique of wood craftsmen. Their forms are designed to be stacked by a product designer, and are useful for saving space.
